

Fall 2017

Registration Guide for Fall 2017 Courses

Registration for Fall courses starts this year on Tuesday, April 4 to Friday, April 14. The Department of Sociology and Anthropology looks forward to working with you as you plan your schedule. This document should help you to do so, but it is not a substitute for an advising appointment, so please arrange to meet with your major advisor before registration.

For complete list of course offerings, please refer to the charts on pages 3 and 4.

Reminder: SOC 302 required lab component

This past year the department added a required lab component to SOC 302 Quantitative Research Methods. Students taking SOC 302 are now required to also register for an additional 80-minute faculty supervised lab component. Equal to one extra class period, students will meet in computer lab 021 with your instructor for additional practice with SPSS, the software program used for statistical analysis. Much like choosing a conversation hour for foreign language, students choose from one of two offered lab sessions as a co-component to the course. Students who have taken 302 this year say the lab has really enhanced their understanding of the material and has actually cut down the amount of time they spend in the basement!

New Courses!!

The department is pleased to announce the addition of two new courses to the department's course offerings, which may be listed on PAWS as 370s until their new numbers appear:

ANT 361 Human Osteology and Forensic Anthropology taught by Dr. Jared Beatrice. Osteology is the study of the skeleton. As a traditional sub-discipline of biological anthropology, human osteology has diverse applications ranging from the reconstruction of human origins to the intersection of anthropology and forensic science. There is a lab component for this course (which may count for natural science with lab, approval is pending and will be announced when complete).

SOC 375 Health Disparities taught by Prof. Phil Prassas. This course focuses on health disparities in the United States to better understand the interactions between health and social factors, such as race/ethnicity, socioeconomic status and gender.

Please see pages 3 and 4 for the schedule of these courses.

Advising

Individual Advising

Students are strongly encouraged to meet with their faculty advisor before registering for classes. Drop by your advisor's office to sign up for an advising appointment time. Sign-up sheets will be posted starting the week of March 20th outside your advisor's office. Please be on time for your appointment and review the HSS "Advising Syllabus" you received over email. If you are unsure who your advisor is, open your student account in PAWS and check the right-hand column under ADVISOR.

Group Advising

A group advising session with Department Chair, Dr. Borland will be held on Thursday, March 31 in Social Sciences 317 from 10:30-11am. Bring any questions you may have. This meeting complements your individual advising appointment with your faculty advisor, and is especially recommended for students newer to TCNJ.

Preparing for Your Advising Appointment

Before meeting with your advisor, review the HSS Advising Policy and your advising syllabus to know what is expected of you. For the meeting, print and bring with you the following items:

1. A tentative schedule of classes for Fall 2017—shopping cart report
2. Your unofficial transcript from PAWS
3. Your academic requirements as listed on PAWS

*Remember that you must meet the following minimum grade requirements in the foundation courses before you may register for department core courses. You may register for core courses if you are currently enrolled in foundation courses, but be advised that your grades will be reviewed before the fall semester and if you do not meet the grade minimums, you will be de-registered from SOC301, SOC302 or SOC 499.

Fall 2017 Special Topics Courses

ANT 370-03—Authoritarianism, Nationalism, and Fascism in the Modern Era (Dr. Chloe Mulderig)

This course will examine the concept of nationalism as it has evolved in the 20th and 21st centuries, with a special focus on the growth of fascism and authoritarianism. Students will read and study anthropological and political science theory to gain an understanding of authoritarian governments and the ways which nationalism is used to mobilize populations. Feature authors will include Orwell, Arednt, Debord, Anderson, Gellner, and others. Over the course of the semester, we will examine several historical examples from across the globe to explore the development of cults of personality, the roles of fascism and theocracy in dismantling democracy, and the ways societies adapt to authoritarian regimes. We will end the course with a discussion of the growth of the national-right movements in Europe and the alt-right movement in the US.

ANT 370-04—Anthropology of Housing Security (Dr. Rachel Adler)

This course will provide students with first-hand experience studying the US population commonly known as “homeless.” Using the Rescue Mission of Trenton as a field site and case study, students will be organized into teams and assist with Professor Adler’s research among the Trenton homeless. Global in scope yet local in focus, the course will review social science literature to understand the lived experiences of those facing housing insecurity.

Students will also be trained in basic qualitative research methods and be directly engaged with homeless individuals via primary data collection, interview transcription and data cleaning.

Fall 2017 Research Opportunities

Each semester the department offers a mentored research course with a faculty member. Working in small groups, students gain valuable research experience while assisting a faculty member with their ongoing research projects. Each faculty member sets their own criteria for application and participant selection. This coming fall semester, Dr. Didi-Ogren and Dr. Gazley will be offering research courses. Please see below for research course descriptions and application procedures.

ANT 390—Research Course in Anthropology (Dr. Holly HK Didi-Ogren)

In this course, student researchers will work with Dr. Didi-Ogren to study how parents in the local Japanese diasporic community use language to create a Japan-centered space for themselves and their children during short- and long-term stays overseas. Members of this research team will have the opportunity to conduct ethnographic interviews with parents at a local weekend Japanese school (in English or Japanese, depending on the language abilities of each team member), code interview data, and review academic literature on: 1) Japanese diasporic communities in the U.S.; 2) weekend schools for Japanese nationals living overseas; and 3) the discursive construction of diasporic identities. Students in this course will also have the opportunity to learn and apply methods for analyzing naturally-occurring discourse, including conversation analysis and the ethnography of communication.

Students who are familiar with the logic of social research and have a strong interest in the subject matter will be considered for recruitment to the research team. In addition, students with Japanese language proficiency and/or a background in linguistics are strongly encouraged to apply.

This course requires instructor consent. If you are interesting in joining the research team, please email Dr. Didi-Ogren (ogren@tcnj.edu) by April 4th with the subject line “ANT 390 application of interest”, and include: 1) your cumulative TCNJ GPA, 2) a list of courses you've taken in SOC/ANT and/or Linguistics far, and 3) what makes you interested in being a part of this research team.

This course will count as an Anthropology 300-level elective toward the Sociology major.

SOC 390—Research Course in Sociology (Dr. Lynn Gazley)

The FIRSTS project aims to understand how students of color and low income students progress through and succeed in Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math (STEM) majors. Our goal is to advise TCNJ and other colleges on structural changes that can support all students, leading to a more inclusive and diverse student body and science profession. In this research seminar, the team will experience many aspects of sociological research. Working together, we will analyze interview and observational data from the summer's data collection; develop, test, and deploy a survey of students' connections on campus; and prepare initial findings.

Students from all majors welcome but preference will be given to Sociology majors.

To apply, please email Dr. Gazley (gazleyj@tcnj.edu) by April 4th with the subject line “SOC 390 application of interest” with the following information: 1) what makes you interested in joining this research project, 2) any relevant courses or experiences you have, and 3) what you hope to gain from your participation. This course will count as a Sociology major 300-level elective.
