FUNDING FOR STUDENTS IN UNPAID INTERNSHIPS

THE SCHOOL OF HUMANITIES AND SOCIAL SCIENCES

The Fund for Students in Unpaid Internships, established in 2019 with donations from 139 friends and members of the TCNJ community, provides a stipend of at least $750 for a 1 unit/4 credit HSS internship with an HSS faculty sponsor, for students with financial need who undertake an unpaid mentored internship for academic credit at a site focused on public service and social justice. Students from groups that are underrepresented in the Humanities and Social Sciences or at TCNJ and first-generation college students are especially encouraged to apply.

The School of Humanities and Social Sciences is comprised of 11 different programs and approximately 2,000 students, making it the largest school on campus. Students in many HSS programs complete faculty-supervised internships for academic credit. Internships provide an opportunity for students to apply their classroom learning beyond the campus, serve the community, and network with professionals. Unlike internships in other fields, internships in the nonprofit and governmental sectors typically are unpaid. For example, in 2019, 115 HSS students undertook unpaid internships, collectively foregoing over $150,000 of paid work. Students who must work for pay instead of taking internships thus face special obstacles in building career paths in public service and social justice.

All students with financial need who are registered (or will be registered) for an internship related to public service may apply but priority will be given to students who articulate how the public service/social justice internship broadly corresponds to their future career interests. Student financial need will be confirmed by the Office of Student Financial Assistance.
